Since 1986, the National Dropout Prevention Center/Network (NDPC/N) has worked to improve high school graduation rates and support educators, researchers, and policymakers in their efforts to address dropout issues. We serve as the national clearinghouse, research center, and resource network for dropout prevention information. Our Web site is the world's most utilized site for dropout prevention resources. We also support the nation's largest network of dropout prevention and intervention professionals, administrators, and researchers, providing numerous and unique opportunities for program and project collaboration. Visit our Web site, email us, or call us for more information.

Membership in the National Dropout Prevention Network supports the work of the NDPC/N, but also comes with tangible benefits for members, including the newest research-based and practical publications based on the successful work of educators and researchers in the field, monthly information and tools to address dropout issues throughout the year, voting privileges in the Network, eligibility for Board membership, and preferential status when participating in NDPC/N activities such as authoring articles for publication, co-developing resource materials or products, consulting as team members on demonstration or evaluation projects, or serving on NDPC/N committees or special interest groups.
